Help me to design a garden of life
Full of iris, crocus, and lily
With daffodils that shine so bright
Like the sun of the greater deities

Make me a path that curves around trees
Of stepping stone, wood chip, and moss
Varying in array of colours
Causing one's mind to venture in thought

Make me a garden so rich in hue
That the sun will fight not to set,
Where merely viewing its beauty
All differences one will forget

Make me a garden like people of the world,
All different in culture and view,
Contributing to the person I am
Without your prejudicial few.

A garden of only one colour it seems
Would be dull and very alone,
I want my garden of life to be filled
With every colour known

Test 15 - Read the following passage and answer the questions.

On one of the Danish islands, there lies a little town whose low houses are covered with red tiles. In a house, there were two boys sitting with their mother; they were still small, but had great thoughts. Their mother, too, had always spoken to them of right and justice, and advised them to keep to the truth, which she admired all the time.

The elder boy looked roguish and enterprising. He took a delight in reading of the forces of nature, of the sun and the moon; no fairy tale pleased him so much. Oh, how beautiful it must be, he thought, to go on voyages of discovery, or to find out how to imitate the wings of birds and then to be able to fly! The younger brother was quieter, and buried himself entirely in his books. When he read about Jacob dressing himself in sheep-skins to personify Esau, and so to usurp his brother's birthright, he would clench his little fist in anger. He was such a sensitive child.

One evening the younger brother was lying in bed, but the curtains were not yet drawn close, and the light streamed in upon him; he had taken his book into bed with him, for he wanted to finish reading the story of Solon. His thoughts lifted and carried him away a wonderful distance.

The elder brother was not yet in bed; he was standing at the window looking out at the mist. He knew better that they were not elves dancing out there in the sky as their old nurse had told him, but the vapours which were warmer than the air. A shooting star lit up the sky, and the boy's thoughts passed in a second from the vapours of the earth up to the shining meteor.

1. Say whether the following statements are True or False by writing T or F against them.

- (i) There were two small boys in the room.
- (ii) The elder brother liked reading about nature and fairy tales.
- (iii) The younger brother was angry when reading Jacob's tale.
